SUMMARY

Objective

The Capital Therapy Project embodies a movement to bring compassionate, respectful, and results-oriented therapy to more of DC. It is an innovative, low-fee psychodynamic therapy training institute in downtown Washington, DC. Developed in partnership with the Therapy Group of DC, DC private practice celebrating 20 years of serving clients, it culminates years of planning and dreaming.

Self and relational psychoanalytic theories, principles, and techniques are emphasized in all aspects of the Project's clinical services, including individual psychotherapy, career counseling, couples counseling, and working with sexual and gender (LGBTQIA+), cultural, racial, and ethnic minority groups.

Contemporary self and relational theories are influenced by the understanding that people are shaped within and by their contexts (environment and culture). Therefore an understanding of self and others includes understanding how one's social and personal identities shape the interactions in the therapy room. Training provides space to understand better these contextual factors and how they interplay between therapist and client in therapy.

Externship Training:

The Capital Therapy Project Externship program is an intensive clinical experience and highly individualized training rarely available in other training settings.

The Externship is an unpaid 12-month in-person training opportunity that emphasizes extensive use of technological and supervisory resources. We aim to train tomorrow's psychologists to excel as culturally sensitive and responsive clinicians and critical thinkers in the digital age's evolving multicultural landscape of psychodynamic therapy.
